Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Famine Truths, Half Truths, Untruths In the Report of the Indian Famine Commission of May, 1901, Sir Anthony Macdonnell has said the last word apparently about the treatment of these frightful calamities, while his powerful individuality is strongly impressed on every page. About the origin, the history, the etiology of famine, nothing hardly is found, nor was the subject within the scope of the Committees instructions. To one paragraph of the report, however, 270, a foot-note is added, dealing with the land assessments of ancient India, and the unjust comparisons with British taxation, to the disparagement of the latter, which have appeared in the Indian press; these comparisons are declared to be of antiquarian rather than of practical interest. I submit that this is a very partial view of the situation. Not only in the Indian press but at home, have repeated efforts been made by responsible writers, English, French, Indian, to trace the causation of Indian famine to heavy taxation and misgovernment. A comparison is made, with an outward show of candour, learning, and loyalty, between the famines of ancient times and those under British rule, by Romesh Chander Dutt, Professor of Indian History in London University, and he traces the frequency and severity of the latter to the crushing pressure of the land tax now exacted, as compared with the mild and gentle fiscal methods of Mogul and Hindu.
